New Scissor Stix From Stoney Point Combines Monopod Staff / Bipod Into One Lightweight Design

Overland Park, Kan. — Stoney Point introduces the new Scissor Stix, a lightweight monopod staff that easily converts to a bipod and steady shooting rest. Hunters and shooters will appreciate the simple, yet innovative design of the Scissor Stix that serves as a hiking staff when closed and a shooting rest when open.

The design of the Scissor Stix incorporates two half-round poles that are connected just below the handle. When locked into the closed position the two halves serve as a sturdy hiking staff with a dual density, ergonomic handle. By flipping open a simple lock, the handle splits and becomes the shooting yoke. The half-round poles can be telescoped to sitting and standing heights. It is a simple, compact and effective system that is easily carried into the field. The Scissor Stix are made of lightweight aluminum alloy and new Stoney Point graphics give the product a distinctive look.
