Stoney Point Improves Tradition Bipod Designs With Three New Attached/Folding Models

Overland Park, KS — For years, hunters and shooters have relied on attached bipod systems to improve accuracy in the field and at the range. Stoney Point brings innovation and improved operation to traditional bipod designs with three innovative new models — the Swivel Pod, the Tactical Bipod and the Lite Weight Bipod. All three are lighter, easier to deploy and less complicated in design.

The new Swivel Pod incorporates a unique ball joint system that lets the shooter quickly deploy the bipod without springs and a lot of noise. The ball joint design provides 360 degrees of pivoting action so it's easy to adjust your aim or track a moving target. The Swivel Pod attaches to the sling stud on any rifle, and users can still attach a sling for easy carrying. There are two models available for shooting in the prone or sitting positions. Suggested retail is $74.99 for the 12- to 18-inch model and $79.99 for the 15- to 26-inch model.

The new Tactical Bipod designed for use on tactical rifles with Picatinny rail mounting systems.

It has the same versatile ball joint system found on the Swivel Bipod for 360 degree pivoting action.

The legs can be adjusted from 9 to 12 inches and they swing easily out of the way when not in use.

Lightweight and durable, the suggested retail is $89.99.

The Lite Weight Bipod is perfect for lighter guns such as the Ruger 10/22. With less weight and bulk than competitive bipods, it will not affect the balance of a gun.

The Lite Weight Bipod is easy to deploy and its 9-inch height keeps it low to ground yet comfortable to shoot from a bench. It easily attaches to the forward sling stud. Suggested retail is $59.99.
